Introduction

Vocabulary is the foundation of every standardized test. This workbook applies the spacing effect — the cognitive-science finding that memories are strengthened when reviews are spread across increasing intervals. Each daily page introduces five new words while recycling words from 1, 7, and 30 days ago at precisely the moment your brain needs them.

Commit to one page per day. The exercises are deliberately varied — fill-in-the-blank, matching, synonym challenge — to force genuine retrieval rather than passive recognition.

The Personal Connection Box is the single most important exercise. Creating a sentence from your own life encodes the word in autobiographical memory, the most durable form of long-term storage.

How to Use This Workbook

1. Study New Acquisitions

Read each entry carefully: word, part of speech, definition, and example. Say the word aloud to engage auditory memory.

2. Complete the 24-Hour Recall

Without peeking back, fill in the blanks from memory. Struggle is productive.

3. Work the 7-Day Deep Review

Match definitions to words from seven days ago. If you draw a blank, look the word up, write it three times, and move on.

4. Tackle the 30-Day Mastery Test

Produce a synonym for each word. This retrieval practice is the most powerful predictor of long-term retention.

5. Write Your Personal Connection

Non-negotiable. One authentic sentence using two new words is worth an hour of passive re-reading.
